

NEWS BRIEFS

Hair cuts to cost more
The Army Air Force Exchange Service announces plans to increase the price of haircuts in April, followed by an additional increase in June. As of April 1, the price for a haircut increases from $6.75 to $7.25. The price increases to $7.60 on June 1. Prices were raised to help balance the won-to-dollar exchange rate.

Wing-wide book drive
The first-ever 8th Fighter Wing Children’s Book Drive runs through April 17. The wing’s goal is to collect 1,000 or more English-language children’s books to be donated to the Kunsan City library. Books should be for children ages 12 and younger. For books being mailed from the U.S., please send them via priority mail. Place books in a bag or box and clearly mark on the outside the date and the number of books being donated. Call public affairs at 782-4705 for more information.

Term IV registration begins
The Kunsan base education center holds registration for Term IV from now until March 31. Classes start April 3 and run through May 27. Airmen must have an Air Force portal account in order to register for college classes. Class schedules can be found on channel 22 or picked up from the education center, library or the health and wellness center.

Pilots, maintainers make progress at ‘Sling’

By Senior Airman Stephen Collier
Wolf Pack public affairs

After three weeks of battling over the skies of Singapore and the South China Sea, the 80th Fighter Squadron “Juvats” are close to accomplishing their mission objectives for this year’s Operation Commando Sling deployment.

Since deploying, the Juvat pilots have engaged the Singapore air force in basic fighter maneuvers and two-on-two engagements, with the exercise culminating in Wolf Pack F-16s taking on two of the highly-maneuverable Singapore F-16s, F-5s and A-4s at a time. Capt. Kevin Daugherty, 80th FS project officer for the deployment, said the squadron is expecting to fly large force air-to-air missions to defend “targets” against other jets simulating enemy aircraft.

“It’s a different challenge than we’d get in Korea and it’s been immensely beneficial training,” Capt. Daugherty said. “We’ll integrate our forces in a mix of flights where both U.S. and Singapore pilots can be mission commanders. This ... integration is important not only for our combat training in the Korean theater, but for follow-on missions for [possible] future assignments.”

To gauge Wolf Pack pilot successes against the smaller, agile Singapore fleet, Capt. Daugherty said the Juvats track each simulated air-to-air kill.

“We don’t keep points, but we do use what’s called the ACMI, or air combat maneuvering instrumentation, on both Wolf Pack and Singapore aircraft to evaluate the fight after it’s occurred,” he said. “That way, in addition to face-to-face debriefs with our ‘adversaries’ and reviewing our tapes, we can evaluate both our Singapore allies and our pilot’s effectiveness in a dynamic air-to-air engagement.”

But air-to-air engagements don’t come easy as planes can’t leave the ground without top-notch maintenance crews keeping them ready. Deployed maintenance personnel from the 80th Aircraft Maintenance Unit haven’t missed a sortie yet, guaranteeing the 80th FS can engage “simulated” enemies every time.

“The maintenance folks have done an outstanding job,” expressed Capt. John Forino, deployed 80th FS assistant detachment commander. “The heat is an adjustment and certainly a change, but they’re doing great and we appreciate the hard work.”

To show their appreciation for the swift maintenance of their F-16s, the 80th FS has offered the deployed 80th AMU members incentive rides to experience first hand how crucial their job is to the mission. To date, the Juvats have flown two

Warfighting and people: ‘Bumper Stickers’ produce world-class results

By Lt. Col. Michael Hays
35th Fighter Squadron commander

Being the best in the world at taking care of both warfighting and people is what we’re all about. But saying it and doing it are two different things. I humbly offer six bumper stickers that, when practiced, produce world-class W & P results. Based on experience — good and bad — these apply to any rank or career field.

Trust is a Must.

With this one, think “gains by the inch, losses by the yard.” Broken trust erodes combat capability — ask anyone that’s had a harassment, assault or discrimination case in their squadron. On the other hand, effectiveness soars and communication gets real easy once we’ve built up a strong bank account of trust. So make regular deposits; tell the truth, defend someone not present, do what you say, consistently enforce standards, give honest feedback and be respectful ... you get the idea.

Keep It Between the Benjo Ditches.

We have plenty of room within our institutional boundaries for fun, creativity, different problem-solving approaches and various leadership styles. We get into trouble, however, when we wander outside established rules, procedures, and laws. Resources get damaged, careers get ruined and people get hurt. In addition to the direct loss of combat power, going outside the benjo ditches creates a distraction that can cause people to take their eye off the really important things — W & P.

An Ounce of Example Is Worth a Pound of Advice.

I pay closer attention to actions than words. When the two are disconnected, credibility plummets — not good for W & P. So regardless of rank or position, set the example and walk the talk ... it’s contagious. Please see Air Force core value number one if you’re still unclear.

Attention to Detail ... It’d Be Easier if There Weren’t So Damn Many of ‘em.

Consistently putting this bumper sticker into practice requires discipline and old-fashioned hard work. I’ve found this one to be a real professional discriminator: Airmen who do it well stand out among their peers. The most effective people I’ve encountered here at the Wolf Pack — those best in the W & P departments — pay attention to important details, never assume someone else is and instill that same trait in their subordinates. They also...

Write Stuff Down, Follow Stuff Up.

It doesn’t matter if it’s a yellow-sticky pad in your pocket, a Gouchi day-planner or a techno-geek palm pilot; it’s the habit that matters. The discipline of writing down prioritized tasks, suspenses, questions your boss asked and, most importantly, following up on them. Looking forward, the process helps you plan and focus effort on W & P. Looking back, it helps you close the loop on stuff. Bosses appreciate loop-closers.

Finally, borrowing from the Panton lexicon:

Push It Up and Never Bring It Weak.

This means attitude and passion — stepping up, taking ownership, being deady serious about our craft and honoring the privilege of wearing the uniform. Our profession demands and our nation deserves nothing less. Push It Up!

maintainers and are projected to fly approximately 20 more.

In an effort to keep morale high while Airmen have transited from Kunsan to Singapore, the 497th Combat Training Squadron, base at Paya Lebar Air Base there, is responsible for hosting the annual exercise, to include transportation, billeting, food, facilities and the execution of the exercise. Lt. Col. Pete York, director of operations for the 497th, said the unit's job is to support not only Commando Sling for the 80th FS, but also three other deployments for other military units as well.

"In times of not-much-fun deployments, this is different," Col. York admitted. "The days are hot, but not long. We fly air-to-air only, so that cuts down on the length of the missions, and therefore, the length of the days. The billeting is great as well as the food, and there is a lot to do in Singapore."

With the exercise entering its fourth and final week, Capt. Forino added the focus of the mission is expected to shift to larger air-to-air engagements.

"As we enter the fourth week of Commando Sling operations, the mission will remain the same as it has from the start ... safe and effective joint training with our allies from Singapore," he said. "Our goals are to continue enhancing air-to-air capabilities and exploiting every opportunity we have. Many members of the Wolf Pack who were instrumental in our deployment weren't able to go with us, but I we'd like to thank them for their hard work and incredible effort to make the deployment an overwhelming success."

Red Devil flight clinches Air Force award

By Senior Airman Stephen Collier
Wolf Pack public affairs

The 8th Civil Engineer Squadron "Red Devils" engineering flight was recently recognized for their mission accomplishment in fiscal year 2005 with the Brig. Gen. Archie S. Mayes award.

The award recognizes a single Air Force engineering flight for their efforts in planning, designing and construction of facilities, utilities, airfields and roadways on the service's many world-wide installations. According to Maj. Juan Kays, the engineering flight commander, the award means Headquarters Air Force wanted to recognize Kunsan's great people and work to reshape the base for years to come.

"There are monumental efforts engineering flights are accomplishing at bases across the entire Air Force, to include supporting the bed down of major weapon systems all over the world," Maj. Kays said. "We are humbled to be included among them."

Engineering flights are also charged with producing engineering planning documents requiring Congressional approval. They also were involved in the design and construction of buildings and infrastructure as well as accurately mapping projects through a system called GeoBase, which integrates imaging, mapping and databases to provide a common installation picture of what's to come.

For the evaluators of the award, Kunsan offered many selections of ongoing and completed construction projects targeted to benefit quality of life for Wolf Pack members. Some notable projects include $126 million for three new dormitories incorporating the "Dorms-4-Airmen" layout, all to be completed in 2009, with the first to open in 2007.

Also, $29 million was dedicated to the construction of new visitor's quarters as well as $7 million toward a new theater, which will also be used as a personnel processing center to help Accept Follow-on Forces.

The flight was also instrumental in mission-oriented projects to include upgrades to the base's hardened aircraft structures, missile maintenance and radar approach control facilities.

In all, the flight has been responsible for efficiently overseeing more than $300 million worth of construction projects, dating back to fiscal year 1998. Maj. Kays admitted it takes all 32 people in the flight to accomplish the mission.

"The people in the engineering flight are what make it all happen. We have some of the brightest, hardest working and dedicated Airmen and civilians I've ever met," Maj. Kays said. "Engineering flight personnel keep a great attitude, despite the massive workload they've had lately. Whether it's preparing documents for higher headquarters approval or providing design or construction oversight on projects, engineering flight Airmen and civilians always rise to the occasion with stellar results."

Lt. Col. Jani McCreary, 8th CES commander, added that all of the Red Devils are extremely proud of the flight's accomplishments.

"For winning this award," she said, "it was truly well deserved. We were also very pleased that both last year's commander and last year's engineering flight chief were able to attend the award ceremony with us in Washington D.C. This was definitely a team effort!"

Korean High-Speed Railway

Did you know?

South Korea has high-speed rail service linking Seoul with the southern port city of Busan that was launched in April 2004. The new rail service, Korea Train Express, or KTX, travels at speeds of about 186 miles per hour and cuts the travel time from Seoul to Busan to two hours and 40 minutes from four and a half hours. South Korea is also one of only four countries in the world (including Germany, France and Japan) to develop a bullet train capable of traveling at speeds faster than 217 MPH. In addition to high-speed rail service, Seoul also has a large subway system that transports about 5.5 million passengers a day. It first went into service in 1974 and now consists of eight lines extending nearly 287 kilometers in area with stops at 263 stations in the metropolitan Seoul area.

ANOTHER ‘STEP’ IN THE RIGHT DIRECTION

Illinois grounds AF season, 78-69

COLORADO SPRINGS, Colo. — Bombs did not materialize in San Diego — off the court or on it.

Two hours before the start of the first round of games March 16 in the NCAA Men’s Basketball Tournament there, bomb-sniffing dogs found a suspicious package in Cox Arena, necessitating an evacuation of the building and a subsequent delay in the day’s games.

When Air Force finally tipped off against Illinois, the bomb many of the so-called hoop experts thought the Falcons would drop, didn’t show up either.

Air Force lost to heavily favored Illinois, 78-69, in the first meeting between the two schools. But, if there is such a thing as a moral victory in defeat, it was the Falcons’ season finale against last year’s championship runners up.

The bluesuiters gave up height, depth, quickness and a gym full of post-season tournament experience (26 NCAA appearances to four) to the Fighting Illini. Air Force, however, never gave up on itself.

The 13th-seeded Falcons kept the fourth-seed from the Big Ten Conference in their sights most of the game.

A steal and driving lay up by junior forward Jacob Burtschi had Air Force nipping at Illinois’ heels, 39-38, with 16:19 left in the second half.

But the Illini reeled off a 6-0 run in the next 49 seconds to keep Air Force head coach Jeff Bzdelik’s crew at arms length.

“We simply could not get enough stops,” Coach Bzdelik said. “When we did, we couldn’t culminate it with a defensive rebound.”

Illinois out-rebounded the Falcons, 28-15. Seven were offensive boards.

Air Force kept the outcome in doubt most of the way — thanks to its three-point shooting.

The last lead the Falcons enjoyed was 11-9, courtesy of a Burtschi 3-pointer with 12:02 remaining in the first half.

Air Force set a Cox Arena NCAA Tournament record for three-point field goals made (13) and attempted (28). Junior guard Matt McCraw led the way going 4-for-5 from beyond the arc.

Meanwhile, Jamar Smith stole the long-range shooting show, and basically the game, for Illinois. The 6-foot-3 freshman guard came off the bench and torched the country’s no. 1-ranked Falcons’ defense for six 3-pointers in nine attempts, en route to a game-high 20 points.

That tied an NCAA Tournament school record for three-point field goals made.

Smith and fellow reserve, junior forward Warren Carter, combined for 32 points on 13-for-18 from the floor.

“We did our best to shut down their power (seniors James Augutine, 10 points, and Dee Brown, eight points), but their younger guys came up big,” Burtschi said. “That’s what teamS with stars like that do.”

“Smith and Carter terrorized us,” said Falcon senior guard Antoine Hood who scored a team-high 17 points and dished out six assists in his final game at Air Force.

Burtschi, McCraw and junior forward Dan Nwaelele each scored 13 points, while center John Frye added eight. The Falcons shot 51 percent from the floor (21-for-41 against the No. 1 rated defense in the Big Ten.

That was negated by Illinois shooting a season-high 58 percent (29-for-50), including 64 percent (16-for-25) in the second half.

“They have a lot of weapons,” Bzdelik said. “We tried to limit them, but their fire power off the bench broke our backs. When we scouted them, three other Big Ten teams told us Illinois was the team they feared the most. By far, they’re the best team we played all year long.”

Reflecting on the Falcons record-setting 24-7 campaign, Bzdelik said he told his players that while losing hurts, they should think about all the good things that happened this year.

“All the credit goes to the players,” the first-year Falcon coach said. “They kept battling, staying within our game. They were very resilient, coachable, dedicated and passionate. I love them. They’re great.” (AFPN)
